The biggest differences between ESL vs. bilingual education are: In a bilingual program, the non-native English speakers all have the same language background, and the teacher speaks both languages as a means of content instruction. In the ESL classroom, the students come from various language backgrounds, and the teacher only speaks English.

ESL vs. Bilingual Education

When it comes to educating children whose first language is not English, there are two schools of thought. There is bilingual education, and then there is English as a Second Language (ESL). The difference stems from varying theories about how kids learn languages, and how this affects their learning in general, as well as their college and career prospects.

What Is the Difference Between ESL and Bilingual Education?

The main difference between ESL and bilingual education is the language of instruction. In an ESL class, students are taught purely in English, with their second language relegated to recess discussions.
